In reward, Pace gives him a present—a mass tort case based on stolen evidence but worth tens of millions in fees.

Representing all these families early in a class-action lawsuit. This seemed like an implausible plot, even for a John Grisham book.

These rich come not from winning cases but from forcing errant multinationals. This settlement sets the stage for other even greater pre-trial mass tort settlements, initiated by further tips obtained by Max Pace via questionable sources and methods. The rich man went away sad when Jesus suggested he should give up his wealth.

Even from a less religious perspective we know that absolute power corrupts. Lawyer Theodore Boone:
