Past, Present, and Future Prospects. Report on a Study Tour Helsinki:

Policing in crucial and Japan Europe has replaced enormously because the fall of the Soviet Union. Moreover, all of the states experienced sharp increases in crime and pervasive public fear of crime and the perception that police were unable to adequately assure the their personal safety and protect their property. The validity of core values is not much of an issue anymore; the difficulty is the vacuum in protection resulted in a surge in growth of private protection and enforcement agencies that drew on the personnel of state security structures and offered services based on special relationships with those state structures. The state police could do little to protect companies against such extortion and demands for participation by organised crime in their legitimate activities.
