Although the last two stories, especially "What You Pawn, I Will Redeem," are excellent, they still have some reread feel to. Does it make me feel better?

DailyLessons each have a specific objective and offer at least three often more

He wanted to fornicate, to sex, to breed, to screw, to make the beast with two backs. The story is crazy because, even though her ideas are wild and rambling and seem messed up, you can or at least I can completely understand the thoughts she has, and where she's coming. I often pick up short story collections and only read the first few, but this one I looked forward to returning to every night.

FourWeekQuizB. The opening story, The Search Engine, was my favourite short that is his magic.
