His job was to look for new team prospects and supervise the coaching of minor leaguers which resulted in making the Braves one of the strongest teams in National League. While studying with Nadia Boulanger in Paris, Copland became interested in incorporating popular styles into his music. In his junior year he was expelled after repeatedly skipping class to listen to the Dodgers games and the exploits of their young second baseman of Jackie Robinson.

During Aaron's long career the Braves only won two National League pennants and one divisional title. His intentions were fulfilled as works from Billy the Kid to Lincoln Portrait to the Pulitzer Prize-winning Appalachian Spring found both popular success and critical acclaim.

Aaron was born into a poor family to Herbert and Estella Aaron as the third of four children. He was mentioned in the 11th Edition of Encyclopaedia Britannica.
