This article has been written from the content of lectures that the author used at the Radiology Leadership Academy at Emory University and the Junior Faculty Career development lectures at the same institution. Yet, it is important to realise that being great does not equate to achieving greatness, a state that comes only through considerable, continuous personal and career growth. Planning leads to continued growth. What is the trait most often associated with successful people?

Box 1 Achieve personal growth. Learn cross-cultural communication skills: Justin B Craig Ph. Use this helpful guide to clarify personal, career, and financial goals. This illustration shows how in the fixed mindset individuals compartmentalise their brains into the things they do or are willing to learn Y and the things they do not do or are not willing to learn N. Do not make excuses. It is easier to make excuses as to why we have not accomplished. Problem Solving with Action Learning.
